One Young World 2017 Bogotá

One Young World 2017 Bogotá is the eighth annual Summit and the first ever to be held in South America. Colombia's President Juan Manuel Santos, the recipient of the 2016 Nobel Peace Prize, welcomed delegates from 194 countries alongside global leaders and press.

In the year following the signing of the historic Colombian Peace deal, which ended more than fifty years of civil war, Colombia's capital played host to over 1,400 delegates from every country in the world. Delegates discussed solutions to the world's most pressing problems, particularly focusing on peace and reconciliation.

With great warmth Colombia opened its arms to One Young World, and invited delegates to learn lessons from its troubled history and take inspiration from its commitment to lasting peace.

The Agenda

for young leaders, by young leaders.

Each year, over 25,000 young people are surveyed and focus groups are held globally to ensure the One Young World Summit content represents the issues of the moment.

THE CONTENT

The results of the Global Consultation Process form the central themes and topics on which the Summit agenda is based.

MAIN STAGE

Main stage sessions span wide-ranging subjects delivered in various formats, from delegate led panels to keynote speeches.

PLENARY SESSIONS

Plenary sessions are the main sessions of the Summit, focused on one of the five key topics chosen by the One Young World Ambassador Community. Each Plenary Session involves Delegate Speakers, selected through a highly competitive application process to showcase the impact of their projects and a global range of viewpoints.

During these sessions young leaders share the stage with global figures such as Bob Geldof, Bruce Dickinson and Thuli Madonsela and present innovative solutions to the world's most pressing issues and make commitments to tangible actions and changes.

This year, for the first time in One Young World history, a sitting President participated as a Counsellor during one of the 90 minute Plenary Sessions. Juan Manuel Santos, President of Colombia introduced Rotem Weizman, a Delegate Speaker from Israel during the Peace and Reconciliation Plenary Session - How to turn a ceasefire into lasting peace?

LOVE ARMY SOMALIA

Jérôme Jarre raised over $2 million in 24 hours to help ease the famine in Somalia. With the money raised, 60 tons of food was flown to areas most in need. Whilst spending time with those most affected Jérôme realised, the most effective way to help was not through food packages but through empowerment. #LoveArmySomalia allows donors to send money directly to Somalian families through basic mobile phones, providing villagers with a monthly income that helps stimulate the local economy.

DOING WELL BY DOING GOOD: CREATING SUSTAINABLE BUSINESS MODELS IN THE COCOA AND CHOCOLATE INDUSTRY

Despite years of in the field action by all stakeholders, cocoa farmer poverty remains a burning issue in Africa and one with significant social and environmental impact. In 2016 Barry Callebaut committed to make sustainable chocolate the norm and in doing so aims to lift half a million farmers out of poverty. CEO Antoine de Saint-Affrique shared Barry Callebaut's attempt at creating a virtuous business model and highlighted the imperative to move from topical relief efforts to systemic business grounded solutions.

Ending Corruption

FIRST TASK: END CORRUPTION

Inequality, injustice and corruption are a toxic combination. The rising feeling of impotence in the face of corruption is contributing to declining trust in governments and big corporations.

Secretary General of Amnesty International, Salil Shetty, presented how the world's largest grassroots human rights organisation works to confront the abuse of power in order to protect justice, freedom, truth and dignity worldwide.

CORRUPTION UNDERMINES DEMOCRACY

Winner of Forbes Africa's 'Person of the Year 2016' Award, former Public Protector of South Africa, Advocate Thuli Madonsela has spent her career protecting the integrity of South Africa's parliamentary republic. Having published the ground-breaking "State of Capture" report in South Africa last year, Advocate Madonsela has been at the forefront of holding democratically-elected governments to account and standing up against the undue influence of private business interests over government institutions. She addressed the role corruption and bribery play in undermining democratic values and the extent to which corrupt systems penalise poorer people the hardest.

Advocate Thuli Madonsela was joined on stage by South African delegates Farai Mubaiwa, Khanya Mkoto and Tefo Mokhine.

CAN BUSINESS TAKE THE LEAD ON ETHICS?

L'Oréal's Chief Ethics Officer Emmanuel Lulin explained why the integration of ethics in every aspect of business is the only way companies can guarantee sustainability and maintain competitive advantage. Concentrating on the positive side of ethics, rather than the negative side of law, Emmanuel Lulin explored the role that young leaders can play in encouraging institutions to become more ethical.

THE FREEDOM TO TELL THE TRUTH

The Arab Spring Revolutions emerged as an expression of people's dissatisfaction with the state of oppression, corruption, nepotism and bribery. 2011 Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Tawakkol Karman talked about the work of her group Women Journalists Without Chains, and the role that the media can play in promoting truth and fighting corruption.

MAKING SENSE OF CORRUPTION

Mohamed Amersi discussed why ending corruption in business is vital to reducing poverty worldwide. It is estimated that as of 2016, worldwide corruption amounts to 1.5 trillion dollars, yet eliminating poverty would cost only 1.7 billion dollars.

POWERING SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

Representatives from across the energy sector discussed the challenges of providing electricity for the 1.2 billion people who lack access to power whilst also meeting their commitments under the Paris Agreement. Electrification in impoverished areas has traditionally been through cheap fossil fuels but the emergence of affordable green energy solutions is providing the opportunity to combine economic development with environmental interests. The panel of leading figures from the rapidly transitioning energy industry explored the role young people can have in accelerating this movement.

Future of Philanthropy

LUMOS - BRINGING LIGHT TO CHILDREN IN THE DARKEST OF PLACES

Founded by J. K. Rowling, Lumos is working to end the institutionalisation of children worldwide by 2050. More than 8 million children around the world live in children's homes and orphanages despite the fact that 80 per cent of them are not orphans but are separated from their families because they are poor, disabled or from an ethnic minority. As a result, many suffer lifelong physical and emotional harm. CEO, Georgette Mulheir, presented the innovative ways Lumos is tackling this systemic problem around the world.

Jérôme Jarre, Taking Action

GUERRILLA HUMANITARIANISM; EFFECTING A GLOBAL CHANGE

Guerrilla Humanitarianism is about taking a no-nonsense, stripped down approach to determining the essentials needed to complete a task: taking matters into your own hands, bringing a solution directly to the problem, under the radar and around the red tape. Encouraged by the proven efficiency of this model, Waves For Water is focused on effecting a global change, one that addresses the challenges faced by philanthropic initiatives in a more decentralised way.

Jérôme Jarre's Love Army has been fighting humanitarian crises in Somalia and Mexico this year, raising millions of dollars and shining a light on some of the world's most tragic disasters. With Juanpa Zurita, Jérôme explained how the world of social media can be used as a force for good and how young leaders can mobilise communities to work together for a better world.

THE PURPOSE- DRIVEN LIFE

Do you ever ask yourself “why do I get up in the morning and go to work?” People following a purpose have an inner drive, an intrinsic motivation. They don’t need incentives to be creative and work hard. They know they are moving in what they feel is the right direction; be it working in an office environment, mastering a sport or a musical instrument, making drinkable water available to everyone

INCLUSION STARTS WITH I

Inclusion, diversity and belonging are about everyone. We all share the need to be understood, valued and feel a sense of belonging. And, the best leaders, at all levels, foster a truly human environment, where people are encouraged to be their truest and best selves, both professionally and personally. Because diversity is what makes winning organisations stronger, smarter and more innovative.

Ellyn Shook, Chief Leadership and Human Resources Officer at Accenture, shared the company’s journey – when a moment ignited a movement well beyond the 411,000 people of Accenture – focused on helping people feel they belong and inspiring others to join this important conversation.

FIGHTING RACIAL INJUSTICE

The recent violent clashes between white supremacists and anti-racism protesters in Charlottesville, America, have once again exposed the deep divisions that exist in the US when it comes to race. Propelling the subject of racism to the forefront of discussions globally, this panel examined global racial injustice issues and offered insights into the successes of the past and challenges for the future. The panel included contributions from Lord Michael Hastings, KPMG International’s Global Head of Corporate Citizenship, DeRay Mckesson, a high profile activist for Black Lives Matter and the Campaign Zero movements and Denise Young Smith, Apple’s Vice President of Inclusion and Diversity, a newly created role to increase the company’s efforts in leading diversity programs and trying to ensure an inclusive culture that is representative and embracing of all diversities.

trauma. AnnaLynne extended her knowledge of the issue to the global sexual violence crisis and the ways in which organisations she supports are working to end domestic violence and sexual slavery in Southeast Asia.

LGBT: ARE THINGS GETTING BETTER?

The panel shared their views of how LGBT rights have progressed and what challenges still need to be overcome to allow the LGBT community to live life on genuinely equal footing. Reflecting on experiences ranging from business to sport, LGBT campaigners from different walks of life made recommendations on the most effective ways to change attitudes and increase tolerance and celebration of different sexualities.

Chaired by Stephen Daldry, Director of Billy Elliot and The Reader, Mark Tewksbury, Olympic Champion Swimmer and Antonio Zappulla, COO Thomson Reuters Foundation were joined on stage by Delegate Speakers Daniela Villegas from Colombia and Fabianna Bonne from the Seychelles.

THE ROLE OF DEMOCRACY IN RAISING MINORITY VOICES

In the age of populism, the tyranny of the majority is resulting in the marginalisation of minorities as diverse voices are drowned out by increasingly polarising opinions. Philanthropist and entrepreneur Mohamed Amersi discussed the role free and fair democracy should play in

EXPRESSION IS A HUMAN RIGHT

The Good Chance Theatre was founded by Joe Robertson and Joe Murphy, two British playwrights, to bring both structure and creative positivity to the refugee camp known as the Calais Jungle. Poverty hurts everyone.

At this year's World Economic Forum, "rising inequality and social polarisation" were cited as the biggest risks to the global economy in 2017.

To coincide with that gathering in Davos, Oxfam released a study showing that the combined wealth of half of the world's population was matched by the eight richest billionaires; Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg, Jeff Bezos, Michael Bloomberg, Warren Buffett, Carlos Slim, Larry Ellison and Amancio Ortega.

The UN's #1 Sustainable Development Goal is a commitment to "eradicate extreme poverty for all people everywhere" by 2030.

In the last five years, 200 million have been lifted from extreme poverty but, with around 800 million still living on less than $1.90 a day, the complete elimination of poverty requires redoubled efforts and new approaches.

The majority of young people surveyed by One Young World believe investment in education and facilitating entrepreneurship will play the most significant roles in alleviating global poverty. Only 16 per cent think foreign aid holds the key.

Delegates and Counsellors highlighted innovations in the fight against poverty with a focus on ideas that create sustainable economic benefits for the world's poorest.

There is no time to lose on climate change.

The hopes raised by last year's Paris Agreement, when 194 countries agreed targets for limiting global warming, are already at risk of being dashed.

According to Mission 2020, the environmental campaign, six milestones must be met by 2020 if we are to achieve the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals of 2030. Mission 2020 says that renewables must outcompete fossil fuels as new electricity sources worldwide within three years; cities must commit to fully decarbonise infrastructure; transport should be zero emission; deforestation must be replaced by earth-friendly practices; heavy industry must be Paris compliant, and annual investment in climate action must rise above USD $1 trillion. The clock ticks.

In 2015, One Young World Ambassadors from 196 countries took part in the #CallOnCOP campaign ahead of COP21, in which they individually called on their respective national leaders to commit to a robust climate agreement.

And yet only one third of young people consulted by One Young World in a global survey said they believe their governments have taken positive action to achieve the UN's sustainability goals.

Despite 80 per cent of young people in the survey saying they want greater government legislation to restrict the use of fossil fuels, many countries remain dependent on them and are seeing an increase in greenhouse gas emissions.

Only 30 per cent of survey respondents believe clean energy is affordable and accessible, with nearly half wanting their governments to subsidise it.

Delegates and Counsellors shone a light on best practices around the world in the energy industry which are overcoming the many barriers to providing affordable, sustainable and modern energy for all.

This is the age of the autocrat.

The accession to the White House of US President Donald J. Trump reflects a wider taste in strongman leadership, visible in Russia, Turkey, China, the Philippines and elsewhere.

Kenneth Roth, One Young World Counsellor and Executive Director of Human Rights Watch, recently introduced the organisation's 2017 World Report with an essay entitled "The Dangerous Rise of Populism," highlighting how laws enshrined to promote tolerance and equality were coming under threat from a "global attack on human rights values."

This new generation of authoritarian leaders, he said, were "treating rights not as an essential check on official power but as an impediment to the majority will." In an international survey of young people by One Young World, 80 per cent of respondents said they had witnessed human rights violations in their country.

Almost half of the One Young World community said their governments do not uphold the human rights of all citizens, indicating a worldwide crisis of confidence in governmental commitment to universal rights.

Delegates and Counsellors examined methods of recourse to address governmental failings on human rights from the public pressure of highly visible social movements to effective and direct engagement with policy makers.

Robots are coming for your jobs.

New research produced by the accountancy firm PwC predicts that 38 per cent of jobs in the United States will be lost to automation inside 15 years.

The pattern is likely to be repeated across all the developed economies, with Germany handing 35 per cent of jobs to robots by 2030, the United Kingdom automating 30 per cent of positions, and Japan 21 per cent, PwC predicts.

It has been ten years since the OECD recognised that education was not keeping pace with technological advances. Entrepreneurship is seen as a fundamental driver of job creation, yet 60 per cent of One Young World Ambassadors were not taught entrepreneurial or financial management skills in school.

With education being a proven tool for sustainable economic growth, advances in technology are enabling better and more equal access to quality teaching in even the poorest parts of the world. But over 50 per cent of Ambassadors believe current education systems are not preparing young people for the jobs of today and must be redesigned.

As robots move into the workplace and many traditional industries decline, new job sectors are being developed and 65 per cent of children entering primary school in 2017 will ultimately end up working in occupations that don't yet exist.

Counsellors and delegates explored ways in which young people are adapting education systems to mitigate the negative outcomes of these global trends.

With more than 40 active wars, insurgencies and ethnic conflicts ongoing around the world, we are living in dangerous times.

One expert at the London School of Economics, Brian Klaas, describes 2017 as "the biggest year for political risk since the end of World War Two".

In a One Young World survey of 2,000 young people internationally, more than half of respondents said they had experienced conflict during their lifetime and 60 per cent lived in fear of terrorism in their country.

The human race has never have been more connected, thanks to the world wide web and corporate globalisation. Yet national, ethnic and religious loyalties remain strong. Asked if they would be prepared to fight for their community if it were under threat, 81 per cent of respondents to One Young World's survey said they would.

Colombia has become a model for healing division, following the historic signing of a ceasefire between the government and FARC rebels last year. The accord effectively ends a 52-year conflict. But while lasting peace has become a possibility, the transition to political stability requires more than a signed document.

According to One Young World's survey, 70 per cent of young people believe that uneven distribution of resources and income inequality are the greatest barriers to achieving peace.

And then there is the delicate issue of bringing the perpetrators of violence to justice. Almost 60 per cent of young people believe such people should face retribution, even after peace has been achieved.

Delegates and Counsellors addressed recent and ongoing conflicts and addressed the complexities of peace building.

Peace Day

In November 2016, President Santos of Colombia signed a historic peace accord with the FARC.

Young Colombians are crucial in making the peace sustainable and so One Young World hosts its first day dedicated to one theme: peace.

OVERVIEW OF COLOMBIA CONFLICT

Whilst the media has made aspects of the Colombian conflict infamous, the complexity and long history of the conflict is unknown to many outside of Colombia. As one of the closest aids to President Santos, Cartagena's young Mayor, Sergio Londoño Zurek, took the delegates through the different stages, sides, motives and tragedies of the violence in Colombia which has lasted over fifty years and explained the challenges of the ongoing peace process.

THE FUTURE OF COLOMBIA

Delving into the impact of the 50-year Colombian conflict, young people from different perspectives, including former FARC rebels, former paramilitary members, and kidnapping victims shared their experience of the conflict to bring to life the impact of war on young people. As well as recounting their personal stories, the young Colombians outlined the key ways they believe peace can be maintained in Colombia in a guerilla fighters to teach them other educational and entrepreneurship opportunities.

Mery Caicedo, Survivor of one of the most conflicted regions of Colombia, she is now a Youth leader who focuses on peace and social entrepreneurship.

Sebastian Cadavid, A former FARC recruit who now owns Deja Tu Huella, a company that donates one pair of shoes to a low-income child for every two sold.

THE WORKS OF PEACE: TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION

Having survived one genocide and witnessing another, One Young World Ambassador Taban Shores hopes peace is achievable in Syria and Iraq. Truth and reconciliation are key pillars in the peace process; Taban spoke with three of the world's most prominent peacebuilders to discuss how the rule of law can be established and maintained in a post-conflict society and the ways in which post-conflict justice can be achieved in order to build respect between former combatants.

Taban was joined on stage by Hassan Jallow, Former Chief Prosecutor in the Rwanda Tribunal, Thuli Madonsela, former Public Protector for South Africa and Leyner Palacios, Global Pluralism Award Winner.

PEACE BEYOND BORDERS

As the first democratically-elected President of Guatemala, Vinicio Cerezo knows the damage that decades of military rule and conflict can inflict on a region. In 2017, President Cerezo was appointed Secretary General of the Central American Integration System (SICA) and leads the multilateral effort to create peace, political freedom, democracy and economic development in the region. In conversation with Beatrice Rangel, former Chief of Staff to the President Carlos Andrés Pérez of Venezuela, President Cerezo drew on the lessons that can be learnt from decades of conflict in Central America and discussed the importance of multilateral organisations such as SICA in maintaining peace.

EXTREMELY TOGETHER: AN ALTERNATIVE NARRATIVE

The complexities of countering violent extremism are frequently ignored by sensationalist and reactionary media headlines. Founded by the Kofi Annan Foundation, European Commission and One Young World, Extremely Together works around the world to combat the global threat from extremist ideologies. Having campaigned on every continent in 2017, the Extremely Together scholars explained the tactics young people can deploy in shifting the narrative to prevent radicalisation and place emphasis on the benefits of inclusion.

PEACE BEGINS WITH CHILDREN

As one of Colombia's best known faces, Taliana Vargas is passionate about using her platform as a force for good. Her foundation, Casa en el Arbol, works to eradicate extreme poverty through working with mothers and families in her home town of Santa Marta. Using examples from her foundation's recent work, Taliana Vargas explored the role children have to play in the peace process.

SPORT FOR PEACE

Icons of world sport discussed the unique role sport can play in bringing people together and promoting tolerance. Drawing on unique, sometimes controversial Olympic journeys, athletes reflected on the ways in which their own careers have influenced their fans and supporters and the extent to which the Olympics and other major sporting events can alter public opinion.

THE ROLE OF THE PRIVATE SECTOR IN POST CONFLICT SOCIETY

Introduced by Mónica de Greiff. As the architect of Unilever's Sustainable Living Plan, Paul Polman explained the role businesses can play in promoting and sustaining peace. With long term thinking at the core of his business philosophy, Paul Polman reflected on the ways in which Unilever is adapting to play its part in achieving the SDGs, particularly Goal 16: Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions.
